SUPREME COURT RETURNS FRANK TO GEORGIA

State Now Free to Carry Out
Death Sentence Imposed for Murder.

(Special to The Herald)
Washington, D. C., April 19.—The supreme court of the United States today dismissed the appeal of Leo M. Frank of Atlanta, Ga., convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan, from the decision of the United States district court of Georgia, denying him a writ of habeas corpus. The high court refused to take Frank out of the jurisdiction of the state court of Georgia which is now free to carry out the death sentence imposed upon him for the murder of the factory girl.

DIVER SAVED FROM DEATH

Loughman Has Close Call
While Working on F-4.

Washington April 18—Diver William F. Loughman, who became entangled in the lines attached to the sunken submarine F-4 Saturday while working under 220 feet of water in Honolulu harbor, has been rescued unharmed.

Admiral Moore cabled the navy department, tonight, that "now" of Loughman's release. Heroic efforts lasting four hours by comrades who went to his assistance saved the diver.

"The lines attached to the F-4 seem clear," Admiral Moore's message said. "Three lines have been passed forward and secured to pontoons."

Navy officers said tonight another line would be made fast to the F-4 before the vessel could be lifted.

PLYMOUTH OFFICER HERE WITH DESERTER

A police officer from Plymouth, N. H., came here today having a deserter from the Coast Artillery service at Portland in charge. The soldier was turned over to a guard from Portland who came here to meet the Plymouth officer. A meeting of the civil officer and the army officer had been arranged for at Dover, but through some misunderstanding the Plymouth man got away before the Portland man reached that city and was on his way to Fort Constitution with his prisoner when he received a telephone message through the local police to await the Portland officer who would come later by electric to Portsmouth and take the deserter in charge.

LIVES IN DANGER AT EXETER FIRE

$15,000 Loss When Lodging
House for Students Burns.

(Special to The Herald)
Exeter, N. H., April 19.—Six Phillips Exeter students, scantly attired fled for their lives early today from a fire in the lodging house of Mrs. M. F. Field. The loss was estimated at $15,000.

Among the students who narrowly escaped injury were Ernest D. Becker of New York City, and Lawrence Denius of Washington, D. C.

Light from the burning building revealed the figure of a man crouching near the Goddess of Liberty statue atop the town hall tower. He proved to be a student at the academy, and tied to his waist were several cans of red, white and blue paint with which he evidently intended to adorn the statue.

DECISION RESERVED UNTIL THURSDAY

(Special to The Herald)
New York April 19—Supreme Court Justice Hendricks today reserved decision until Thursday after hearing arguments of Harry K. Thaw's habeas corpus writ which asked that Thaw be released from custody or be given a trial by jury on the question of his mental standing.

AUSTRIA AND ITALY ON VERGE OF WAR

Austrian Ambassador Sends Family and Archives From Rome to Vienna
—Russians Preparing to Continue
Drive Into Hungary

(Special to The Herald)

Paris, April 19.—Baron Von Macchio, the Austrian ambassador to Italy, has sent his family and the archives of the embassy to Vienna from Rome, according to a dispatch received from the Italian capital today. This new development has led to the conclusion that Italy is on the brink of war. While a reported clash between Austrian and Italian troops at the frontier is given credence but as yet is entirely unconfirmed, it is understood in military circles that war would come between the two countries from just such an incident.

The Italian cabinet ministers are holding daily conferences at Rome with King Victor Emmanuel. Pope Benedict XV. and Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria are exchanging letters about the situation. Prince Von Buelow, who has been negotiating for Austrian concessions to Italy, has been reported to have broken off all relations and returned to his own country, although this is not confirmed.

Feeling among the Italian people is running high and the fact that Prinz Von Buelow, the German ambassador at Rome, has objected to the suggestion that Austria cede Trent to the Pope to be held by him until after the war and then turned over to Italy has tended to increase the feeling of unrest.

An earlier suggestion that did not meet with the approval of Austria was that Trent be ceded to Germany, to hold until the close of the war, or that it be occupied until that time by Switzerland, with the agreement in either case that the territory eventually should become Italian.

(Special to The Herald)

Petrograd, April 19.—The first part of the Russian campaign in the Carpathians is ended. The Czar's troops are now strengthening their positions won in the mountain ranges and the opening of operations to clear the way of the Austro-German forces from Buehwain on Eastern Galicia.

On the whole Carpathian front, between March 19 and April 19, the enemy has suffered enormous losses and has left in our hands in prisoners alone, 70,000 men, including about 900 officers.

As soon as Eastern Galicia is cleared of opposition and normal weather conditions prevail the main effort—the invasion of Hungary—will be resumed.

Minor successes for the Russians about Rostek, 40 miles southwest of Czernowitz, are reported. This shows that the Russian forces have crossed the Dniester river and will make their drive towards Jobotian Pass through which leads a railroad to Marmaroszegit. German and Austrian claims of the Russian losses of 500,000 killed in the Carpathian campaign are emphatically denied by the Russian war office.

Submarine SINKS
BRITISH TRAWLER

(Special to The Herald)

Hull, England, April 19.—The British trawler Vanilla was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine in the North Sea on Sunday. The trawler Fermo tried to save the Vanilla's crew but was driven off by the German boat.

AGAIN BOMBARDING FRENCH FORTRESS

(Special to The Herald)

Paris, April 19.—The Germans are bombarding the French fortress of Belfort. It was announced today, bombs dropped from the German aeroplanes set fire to two hangars and caused considerable other damage, but not of a serious nature.

A communication also reported further success in the drive of the French troops toward the river Rhine, they taking a series of important heights, and capturing two cannon and two machine guns. The British have also resumed the offensive.

TURKS ADMIT DEFEAT FROM BRITISH

(Special to The Herald)

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, April 19.—That the Turkish efforts to reach the Persian gulf have received a setback is officially admitted here today. The war office issued a statement that the arrival of British reinforcements have forced the Ottoman troops to retire.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE STOPPED

(Special to The Herald)

Boston, April 19.—As a result of a protest made at the state house today by a crowd of over a thousand colored people, Governor Walsh and a committee proposed a plan to the people to prosecute the producers of the film, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Tremont Theatre.

The prosecution will be asked for under section 367 of the Acts of 1910, which prohibits the showing of "suggestive" entertainments and provides for a fine of $500 or imprisonment for one year or both for the producers of such entertainment as shall be proved "suggestive."

A group of colored people on the steps of the state house began to sing "Ameri'en," but hissing drowned out the singing. The singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" was received in the same manner. A parody on "Well Hang Jeff Davis to a Sour Apple Tree," substituting the name of Tom Dixon, the author of the "Clansman," from which the play was taken, was sung by nearly the entire crowd.

EDWARD FABRE WINS BIG RACE

Crossed Tape in 19th Annual Marathon in 2 Hours, 31
Minutes, 41 1-5 Seconds.

(Special to The Herald)

Boston, April 19.—Sixty-four of the crack long distance runners of the country got away today at noon in the great 26-mile Marathon race from Ashland to Boston. The feature of the first half of the race was the running of Hugh Honohan of the New York A. C. at Auburndale, 16 miles from the start. He was leading, with Poreca of New York one foot behind. Fabre of Montreal who was the favorite in the race was in seventh position at this point.

At Coolidge Corner, 22 1-2 miles from the start, Honohan was still leading, time, 2 hours, 13 minutes; Horne of Dorchester 2d, time 2 hours 16 1-2 minutes; Fabre of Montreal was in third place.

Ed. Fabre, the crack Montreal long distance runner crossed the tape at the end of the 25 mile run in 2 hours 31 minutes 41 1-5 seconds.

Clifton Horne of Dorchester Club 2d, time 2 hours 33 minutes 1 second.

Sidney Hatch of Chicago, 3d, time 2 hours 35 minutes 47 seconds.

DELIGHTS IN PUBLICITY

New York April 18.—The prospect of passing a long term in state prison did not dampen the joy of 19-year-old John Muriel at finding himself a figure of general interest yesterday because of his futile attempt to blackmail Vincent Astor.

Magistrate Murphy first set his bail at $2500 but when Baratta told him what the boy had said the magistrate quickly doubled the bail to $5000.

BRAVES WIN MORNING GAME

(Special to The Herald)

Boston, April 19.—With Paul Strand, the left-handed phenomenon in the box, the Braves walked away with the morning game at Fenway Park, defeating Brooklyn 7 to 2. Opposed to Strand was "Wheeler" Dell, a righthanded, who hails from the Pacific coast.

While the youth appears to be perfectly sane the district attorney intends to have a committee examine him.

Prayers will be said over the remains of Mrs. E. R. Currier at the home of Dr. E. Horner, 483 Lincoln avenue, Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock. Friends invited.

The trout season will probably open before they get through with Harry Tracy in New York.

The Chief is a Hard Man To Warm Up To

CAPT. RAND TELLS LIFE'S STORY

Court Hears Lucky Stone Testimonials From Admiral Dewey and Other Noted People.

Walter E. Rand, a former Portsmouth man who is now before Judge Aldrich in the U. S. Court at Boston charged with fraudulently using the mails in selling "The True Oriental Lucky Stone" testified he was sixty years old, born in Portsmouth, N. H. He worked on a farm until he was 13, later followed the sea and rose to the rank of Captain. At one time he conducted a barber shop in the old Boys- ton market.

Under direct examination by Attorney Casey, Rand said:

"I first heard of the lucky stone in India. I was in bad luck there and a native gave me one of the stones, telling me it would bring luck. I pooh-poohed the idea, but the next morning a number of Bostonians arrived on a steamer. Among them were some Roxbury people whom I knew."

"I showed them around and got some money from them. When I told them about the lucky stones they went broke buying them."

"The natives told me they always had good luck from the moonstones. They always wore them. The higher class carried them in their pug hats. I inquired of the natives where they got the stones and they told me they were found in mud and in the seams of disintegrated rocks, but to get them I would have to go through the jungle, encountering all sorts of dangers."

I remember going through the jungle and having a fight with a large cobra. I got some of the stones."

Q.—When did you hear about that magic mirror? A.—I heard about it in India from the natives. They said they could tell the past, present, and future by looking at the flaws in the stones, which were known as magic mirrors.

Testimonial circulars played an important part Friday at the trial.

One testimonial read by Postoffice Inspector W. B. Hurley was:

"Dear Captain Rand:

I have one of your lucky stones. I have had splendid luck. Everything is coming my way."

Another read:

"M. J. RYAN.

Captain Rand:

When my husband came home

showed him the lucky stone and told him all the luck I had with it and he wants one."

MRS. JAMES P. LOQUE, California.

Still another subscriber wrote:

"My friend asked me to write for won-

of the lucky stones.

Inspector Hurley read excerpts from Rand's circulars, among them one in which Captain Rand wrote:

"No. 1750 Tremont street,

Dear Friend:

"A mutual friend requested me to tell you the story of my life. I want to say I have travelled through India and the Orient. While travelling I procured a few lucky stones. I secured rare stones in India."

Admiral George Dewey, Admiral George Hewitt and Admiral Houston have some of the stones and have enjoyed good luck. If you want one send $1.

George A. Cary, government appraiser at the Boston Custom House, testified that some of the lucky stones exhibited were worth about 5 cents.

THROUGH CANAL JULY 4

Conferences Regarding Plans for Manoeuvres of Atlantic Fleet and Journey to Exposition

Washington, April 18.—Conferences between Sec. Daniels and high naval officers regarding plans for the forthcoming manoeuvres of the Atlantic fleet in Narragansett Bay the review of the fleet in New York in June and the passage through the Panama Canal in July were continued yesterday. Participating with the Secretary were Adm. Fletcher commander in-chief of the Atlantic Fleet and Rear Adm. Usher commandant of the New York navy yard.

Tentative plans call for the presence of the fleet in New York June 19 when the dreadnought Arizona will be launched there. By that time the exercises of Newport will have been completed. The fleet then will begin its long cruise to the Panama-Pacific Exposition manoeuvring en route. It is expected that the fleet will pass through the Canal July 4.

Many out-of-town automobiles and motor cycles passed through this city on Sunday. Most of the cars bore Massachusetts or New Hampshire registry plates.

FOR THAT "RUN-DOWN" "TIRED" CONDITION

Make Yourself Feel Fine-as-a-Fiddle

With Famous Rheumatasalts

If the severe strains of business and social life are beginning to tell on you and you are in a run-down condition, give your internal system a bath.

This is easily done by simply dissolving a little Rheumatasalts in a glass of water, and you have a delightful carbonated drink that cleans out the stomach and intestines, eliminates toxins and poisons, and leaves the intestinal canal clean and free up in short order.

If you are bothered with constipation, headaches, swollen skin, coated tongue, bad breath, indigestion, biliousness, neuralgia or rheumatism, Rheumatasalts will fix you up in short order.

Rheumatasalts acts quickly and gently on the bowels, liver, and kidneys without griping or nausea. It is a safe and solvent as well as a saline laxative.

Rheumatasalts contains no calomel or other injurious drugs. Ask your druggist for about five ounces. If they haven't Rheumatasalts, communicate with the famous Rheumatasalts Company, Minneapolis, Minn., and they will see that you are supplied.

Changes in the York Beach Time

The Boston and Maine railroad has corrected the time table on the York Harbor and Beach branch to April 26. The first train to leave Portsmouth for York starts at 10:55 o'clock and arrives at its destination at 11:35.

Stops are made at all the stations along the route. The next train pulls out at 2:55 p. m. and arrives at 3:31. The last, which is a mixed train, is scheduled to leave this city at 5:55 p. m., arriving at 6:45.

Two trains leave Portsmouth for the Kittery Navy Yard, one at 7:08 a. m. and the other at 4:00 in the afternoon.

Returning from York Beach to Portsmouth the first train leaves at 10:20 and the next pulls out at 12:55 and the last at 4.

This table will be corrected again in June when the summer schedule goes into effect.

WEDDED AT

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

ANNE MAY RAND BECOMES THE BRIDE OF EVERETT MONROE SMITH OF WORCESTER, MASS.

Historic St. John's church was the scene of a pretty wedding Sunday noon, when Miss Annie May Rand of Rye became the bride of Everett Monroe Smith of Worcester, Mass. Previous to the marriage ceremony the couple were christened according to the rites of the Episcopal church. Miss George Hill presided at the organ and to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march the couple took their station at the chancel where the ceremony was impressively performed by Rev. W. M. Partridge of Wallaston, Mass., who is at present supplying the pulpit at St. John's.

The bride was attractively attired in white and wore a hat to match. The congregation had been invited by the rector to remain and witness the ceremony. At the conclusion the parishioners gathered in the vestibule and showered hearty greetings on Mr. and Mrs. Smith. The newly married couple will take up their residence in Worcester, and have the heartfelt wishes of a large circle of friends for their future prosperity.

Sunday was an ideal day and was greatly appreciated, especially as stormy weather had been predicted.

Good Business Ahead.

All indications and reports are to the effect that business conditions are rapidly improving. Even the men and newspapers that have been most pessimistic regarding the outlook are obliged to admit that there is a steady brightening up all along the line and that there is in plain sight business for all who want to do business, and work for all who want to work.

Secretary of the Interior Lane has just returned from a trip to the Pacific coast and is enthusiastic over the business outlook. He says that no talk of hard times is heard in the West, and that there is much less of this sort of talk in the East than there was some time ago. Secretary Lane believes that within six months there will not be an idle man in the country who is willing to work. He points to the fact that money is plentiful and that interest rates are low. Many industries are directly benefited by the European war and many more will be benefited when the end of the war comes. Manufacturing in the old countries has been seriously interfered with by the war, and to a large extent the manufacturers of this country will be called upon to make up the deficiency. Mr. Lane is undoubtedly right when he says "the rebuilding process in Europe is going to call on American industries more extensively than the war has."

It will be useless for partisans to contend that Secretary Lane is talking in this vein for effect, for evidences of better conditions are appearing in every quarter. The buoyancy of the stock market is a sure indication of confidence returning, if not already established. Cotton, which for a time was such a drug on the market that the growers were appealing loudly for assistance, is rapidly finding its demand and its price. The complaint of unemployment is fast dying away and there is every reason to believe that there is an era of good business ahead. It may take a little time to get all departments into full swing, but things are moving and the pace is bound to increase from this time on.

People old enough to remember the Civil war are aware that its first effect on business was bad, but that the depression was followed by a boom that lasted for years. There is reason to expect that the results of the present war will be about the same. It is time to cheer up, so far as the business outlook is concerned, and get ready to attend to the business that is already here or on its way.

The alumni of Dartmouth college do not take kindly to the idea of making it a co-educational institution, as was recently suggested, and even the promise of a large endowment, which accompanied the suggestion, has no effect on most of the graduates, who are determined that Dartmouth shall remain what it has been, a first-class small college for men. Whatever the merits of the proposition, it is refreshing to witness an incident in which the promise of a large sum of money fails to cause every one to take off his hat, bow low and ask no questions.

The daughter of Thomas A. Edison, the famous inventor, will act as sponsor of a submarine being built at the Portsmouth navy yard when the time comes to launch the vessel. It will be equipped with the new Edison battery, and this led Secretary Daniels to invite the daughter of the inventor to act as sponsor. In accordance with ancient custom wine will be used in christening the vessel, though under the secretary's ruling it cannot be used on board of her.

Mrs. Pankhurst, the leader of the British militant suffragettes before the beginning of the war, is now pleading the cause of England on the lecture platform and is a very popular orator. The hatred engendered by the boisterous and destructive campaign for suffrage has subsided and Mrs. Pankhurst is today "a graceful, dignified figure," and is greeted with thunderous cheers and applause wherever she appears. It makes a difference whose ox is gored, even in time of war.

It is reported that some of the leading clubs of Washington have been hard hit by the war, especially those in which the representatives of the different nations have been wont to mingle. Under present conditions life in these clubs is not what it used to be and they are very lonesome places, as compared with former days. But the effect on club life in Washington must be regarded as one of the very minor results of the war.

An old saying is, "There is more than one way to skin a cat," and the governor and legislature of New York are demonstrating that there is more than one way to exchange one set of public officials for another. There are large possibilities in "reorganization" of departments providing high honors and enticing salaries.

There is a growing suspicion that former Naval Constructor Hobson was not so far out of the way in his prediction about war with Japan.

CURRENT OPINION

Every Person Should Have a Plan to Guide Life's Work.

Every person should have a life plan which he may follow. Don't go zig-zagging along without such a scheme. Every one should decide upon a proper mental attitude for the contests which he expects to meet in life. In every line of commerce or industry an outline or chart is made out before anything constructional is attempted, and every man should make a similar outline of his life work before going ahead.

In these days we hear much about financial budgets or forecasts for scientific administration of great organizations. A life budget should be adopted to guide, restrain, direct and make plain the work of career building.

This life budget should take the form of clear cut specifications by which the man should be constantly guided just as the contracting builder is guided by the building specifications. This is the only safeguard.—By Professor S. W. Gilman, University of Wisconsin.

BOSTON LETTER

That the wage of an unexperienced female employee of ordinary ability in the Massachusetts candy industry be not less than $8.75 a week, has been agreed by the minimum wage commission. It has been proposed that the recommendation shall take effect October 1, 1915. The majority of the female employees have been found by the board to receive less than $6. a week. In addition to the minimum wage for experienced female employees, the decree provides: That the wages of learners and apprentices may be less than the minimum prescribed for experienced employees, provided that no female employee of ordinary ability shall be deemed inexperienced who has been employed in the candy making industry for two years or more; that no female employee of ordinary ability who has been employed in the candy making industry for one year and a half, shall be paid less than $7.75 a week, and no worker who has been employed one year shall receive less than $6.75 a week; that no other female employee of ordinary ability shall be paid less than $5 a week. The finding is based largely upon the conclusions of the majority of the Candy Makers' Wage Board, which was appointed to go into the matter by the commission.

No appointment going in for the chief of the district police it is thought that the governor is having difficulty finding a young man of the type desired, one to clean out the department. The fact that an appointment must be made from the force is preventing a severe handicap, despite the large numbers who would be willing to undertake the job.

Senator Doyle of New Bedford believes that the state board of arbitration and conciliation is the quietest and yet most hard working board in the state employ. The rest of the senate is inclined to believe that, but will not raise the salary of the board's member, unfortunately, owing to certain causes pledges that are broken every now and then. The fact is that the arbitration board has been working too quietly. If it had the public germ the way other commissions have it, things might go differently with it. The commission has brought on this state the name of the strikeless state.

The Savings Insurance banks have begun to issue policies on the lives of children between the ages of nine and fourteen. To the large extra dividends declared by the two oldest insurance banks and to the privilege of issuing $1,000 policies recently granted by the legislature, the banks now add this opportunity for parents to secure all the advantages of savings bank life insurance on children's policies. A straight life policy for $100 on the life of a child ten years old costs only 12 cents a month. A 20 year endowment for $100 costs 39 cents per month. These policies receive annual dividends and are an immediate full benefit.

A score or more of New England women will soon be leaving for Los Angeles to attend a conference where 200,000 women of this country will be represented. They are delegates to the Y. W. C. A. biennial conference of the association. The party will leave Chicago on a special train on April 23. The convention will be held on Thursday, Fast Day, Portsmouth.

STACY TRIAL TO BE HEARD EARLY

County Solicitor Guptill Has Been Busy Securing Evidence of Peculiar Case.

Preparatory to presenting the case of George Stacy, charged with the killing of Harry Meloon at the Massachusetts rifle range, to the grand jury, County Solicitor Guptill was in Manchester last week collecting evidence. The matter will be given to the consideration of the Rockingham county grand jury next Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock, at which time all witnesses have been subpoenaed to be present.

It will be recalled that young Meloon and a companion, who had recently joined the militia had gone to the rifle range for target practice, thinking that they had a right to do so at any time. Stacy, who was the range keeper, heard them firing and observed their actions to be contrary to the rules of the range, whereupon he rushed out with a loaded army rifle, called upon the boys, only one of whom had a gun, to throw up their hands and then fired. Young Meloon fell dead.

The case was a most extraordinary one in all its phases, both as to the shooting and the way it was handled immediately thereafter and caused very general indignation at the time. Stacy was left alone for four or five hours guarding the body of the boy he had killed, before any official notice was taken of the tragedy, and before any steps tending to an investigation of it were made by the proper authorities.

But, in common with thousands of others who looked at the question as an abstract proposition, and hoped for the best, I am so greatly disappointed at the way it has worked out that I would today welcome an opportunity to vote for its withdrawal; and I believe if it were resubmitted to the people of Washington, and every man and woman of voting age were compelled to vote upon it, woman suffrage would be defeated by an overwhelming majority."

"Many of us were led to support woman suffrage in Washington by the familiar argument that it would tend to purify politics and make for better government. But, after four years of experience we are forced to conclude that it has done neither. On the contrary, it has simply added to the numbers of those who can be used in the interest of corrupt politics, and has resulted in a hedge-podge of ill-digested, sentimental, socialistic legislation which is a menace to the welfare of the State."

A TOUCH OF NATURE

The German trenches were close to both sides of the British Guards did it.

Well hidden in our own, and moreover, when the president of the organization can stand up and, glaring into the eyes of intelligent women, assert that they're a lot of nasty tramps because they differ from her, it is time to drop her into the well of oblivion.

Some distance from our underground Abodes, a sentinel I had found, of coal a large supply; Agreed with unanimity.

So stealing from our trenches there, a party of some twenty men, Without arms, we went; And crawling on our stomachs lest We should disturb the Germans' rest.

Whose hearing was intent, We reached the treasure, but to find The enemy had counter-mined—

On the same errand, some had stolen from their trenches, and We met here at the no-man's-land!

Astonished all and dumb, For a few moments stood we there; Then one said, "What's the use To fight?"—Between ourselves then we Agreed we would not disagree,

And formed a coal pile true, Then each night, from either side, A silent party there would glide Past sentinel, at will;

The challenge but a sign that he Knew well who could the provokers be, And vigilance was all.

BLASTING AFFECTS FIRE ALARM

It is said that the blasting at Hampton which interferes with the high tension wires from this city is the cause of trouble to the fire alarm system at Newburyport.

The storage batteries of that city's telegraph are charged from the street railroad. Recently Superintendent Welsh finds the batteries growing weak because the power for the electric cars is being secured temporarily from the Amesbury electric light company and is of very much less voltage than the Portsmouth supply, so much so that the fire alarm is feeling the effect of it and is very weak.

The breaks have recently bothered the operation of the street cars on all the lines of the Massachusetts Northeastern Street railway in that section.

the speaker said that the Christian's danger is that he will conform to the world. The Christian is to be in the world that he may leave the world and yet be not of the world. The following were some of the practical pieces of advice offered to his hearers by Mr. Scott, to the end that they might renew their minds, as Paul desired his hearers among the Romans to do: Shun evil companions, talk of religious things, pray, be faithful in attendance upon religious services, undertake religious work.

A large audience heard a very interesting and particularly evangelistic sermon at the evening service at the church. "The Art of Quick Decision" was the subject, and it had for its base, Matthew's instant decision to follow Jesus when the command came to him. *

PORSTMOUTH THEATRE PROGRAMME

For Monday and Tuesday Afternoons
Only

Our feature picture for these days will be "Lola" a fine five reel photo play featuring Clara Kimball Young the late Vitagraph actress, produced by the World Film Corporation and written by Owen Davis.

The story of "Lola" is one of the most remarkable that has ever been put on the screen and there is no doubt that it will become a subject of wide-spread discussion and divergence of opinion. Was Lola really dead? This is one of the questions remaining a mystery until the end. This film will be shown at 3.10. Aels will be on also.

Charlie Chaplin will also be shown at 2.15.

Monday Evening Only
"The Girl Detective" - Kalem in 2 parts.

This is the ninth story entitled, "The Diamond Broker." He is suspected of smuggling, and the case is put into the hands of the Girl Detective. This picture is certainly an entertaining chronicle of crime. Cleo Ridgely in the title role.

ACT

"Heart-Selig News Pictorial"

A film for the children as well as the grown-ups. Scenes of Europe and America.

ACT

Charles Chaplin in a two reel comedy called "The Tramp" which is very funny. Don't fail to see him at this theatre.

For Wednesday and Thursday

"Poison" - A Kalem product is 2 parts. Made in co-operation with the West End Pure Food move.

"Billy Sunday" in action - one reel.

"THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE"

It is admitted that the novelty or a play with a brawny girl as heroine appeals to the theatregoers. The production of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, with its stirring scenes and powerful lines, thrilled its audience.

To the Business Men of Portsmouth

The prosperity of a city is in direct proportion to the local pride. Where local pride runs high, prosperity has a firm foothold. Such a town is a good place to live and do business in.

Paint helps to a remarkable degree in spreading an impression of prosperity throughout a community. It gives a fresh, new, inviting look wherever it is used. Municipal buildings, stores and homes feel its good effects. Growing business is bound to be one of the direct results of a liberal use of paint, not from any magic in the paint, but because of the pride which is stimulated.

massive audiences during the long runs in those cities. Its great success is due to the gorgeous scenic production given in the play, as well as the sympathetic portrayal of June, the mountain girl, Newburyport and play the team in the region where the scenes of the play and book are laid and he has just as, deftly transplanted the fragrance of the pines and the impression of the play to the stage as Mr. Fox did in the pages of his delightful narrative which has been read by millions of men, women and children.

HEADQUARTERS FOR Hats, Caps, Trunks and Bags

The Westfield Pure Food Movement has attained such gigantic dimensions and the interest in Professor Lewis B. Allyn has become so national, that the Kalem Company in co-operation with the McClure Publications, and The Portsmouth Chronicle has made an intensely dramatic two-act educational photoplay entitled "Poison, a Story of the Food Fakers," in which Professor Allyn takes a leading part.

This picture will be shown at the Portsmouth Theatre Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

This story has been written by Mr. Harry Hoyt, using the photoplay as a basis. Every photoplay enthusiast in the country will want to see this interesting and instructive film which will be run in Portsmouth under the auspices of the Portsmouth Chronicle, every one interested in pure foods will want to read this story and see the play.

Scarcely home from college a week, John Webb had tired of lounging around and was keen to plunge into business; to shift to his own broad shoulders some of his father's business cares. He had little or no knowledge of the business world but had a certain code of ethics which he felt would do well in future business. His father had made it plain to him that the future prosperity of the Webb (Present) Company would rest with him once he had graduated, and Jack was anxious to live up to his father's expectations.

Jack went in search of his father one afternoon and came across him in the library. Mr. Webb did not hear his son enter, being lost in reverie over the photograph of his dead wife. The son grasped the situation in a flash and stood motionless in the doorway, his breath held in reverence. Finally his father turned and greeted him with a smile.

"Well, Jack," he remarked carefully placing the picture on the marble-top table, "what's on your mind now?"

"I thought I'd run in for a little business chat so that I won't be all at sea when I begin."

"I'm mighty glad to hear it son. It's a good sign. For years," his father went on, a tender inflection creeping into his voice, "I've been looking forward to the day when you could take my place and follow out my plans. Think you'll be able to do it?"

Jack's boyish face glowed with pride and confidence.

"I haven't the slightest doubt of it dad. Of course I realize that I will have to begin at the bottom and learn; but as soon as I get a grip on matters it won't be long before you will be able to take a much needed rest."

Webb's care-worn features flushed with parental affection as he led Jack to a leather couch.

"Jack, my boy," he began, and was about to continue when a knock came to the door. Jack went to the door and admitted Flemming the superintendent.

"A girl, Mary Rand, is outside and insists on seeing you," Flemming said.

"Who's Mary Rand?" Webb asked, apparently annoyed by the intrusion. "One of the stock girls."

"Stock girl! I have no time to see stock girls in my home. You think out what she wants and tell me tomorrow. I'm too busy now."

Flemming turned to obey and bumped into the incoming Mary, flushed and about to speak, but checked herself as Webb raised his hand.

"You gotta see me now," she declared, riveting her gaze on the somewhat startled Webb. "We girls are just starving to death on the money you pay us and we demand a raise. Here's the list that want more money." She held out a sheet of soiled foolscap.

Flemming reddened and made a dive for her.

"Here you," he snapped roughly, catching her by the arm, "you clear out of here and wait until you're called."

Webb sprang to his feet clenched as his fists nervously and for several seconds watched the girl's futile struggle to remain.

"Take your hands off," Jack commanded impulsively, not knowing whether or not his father would approve of his interference. "You may wait outside and if we need you we'll call you."

Flemming turned and looked at Webb, probably hoping that the latter would countermand his son's order. The continued silence, however, destroyed his hopes and he went out. As soon as he had gone, Mary put her back to the door and waited, panting and nervous. Webb, scrutinized carefully, a slight sneer lingering at the corners of his mouth,

The scene was new to Jack and one he did not understand; but it was an old one to his father. On previous occasions Webb had ordered the disturbances out, and those refusing to go had been put out and later discharged. This was the first time any one had ever sought him at his home. Had his son been absent in all probability he would have accorded Mary similar treatment.

Jack grew uneasy and felt that his presence had something to do with Mary's remaining, and it hurt him to think so. He could not picture his father who had been so devoted to him, as a slave-driving brute, nor as an employer growing opulent by starving his help; but the girl's charge was damning, and had been hurled at feet at his father. Was it possible that some of the money that had been used for his education and pleasure should have gone to starving girls? He shuddered at the thought and hoped the girl's accusation would prove to be a lie.

She stared at him unable to comprehend fully the meaning of his invitation. To her he probably looked up as some strange creature, so unlike all others she had met, and his friendly interest confused her. Her bosom rose and fell several times from sheer emotion, and then she continued:

"Other men do pay better wages and they keep clean places to work in—no places filled with dirt, roaches and bugs. And the places don't stink with the filth piled up in corners; and the men don't shiver when the inspector comes. They don't have to take cast-offs like your father—people that have been sacked dry by human leeches. You're young and clean now, God bless you, but you won't last long if you listen to the leeches, in places where they turn people's hearts into dollars and cents."

They stopped for a breathing space and brushed a tear from her eye. Webb was about to say something but changed his mind as Jack motioned for silence. The father had never been to college himself and had a great deal of respect for his son's views.

Mary took advantage of her champion's inattention and went on:

"The stuff we have to put up often stinks. It's full of fake vegetables, cores and skins, and wouldn't keep if you didn't embalm it with chemicals or surroundings. It was a puzzle to him how she ever managed to keep body and soul together on that sum when he had to pay six dollars a week just to store his motor boat."

"Say dad," he remarked, interrupting his father who was about to address the girl, "don't you think five fifty is pretty close shaving for a human being? I used to spend more than that for tips every week at college."

"Take it easy dad," Jack advised. "She's just a poor working girl." Then he turned to Mary. "Now girl, you've said some very nasty things against my father and I'm going to look into both sides. You can rest assured that you'll get justice if I have the power to give it. Now you may go."

The girl started for the door but before she had cast a grateful look in Jack's direction, when she had gone, Jack turned to his father now seated on the couch.

Mary's eyes flashed fire and she was about to speak, but checked herself as Webb raised his hand.

"Now young lady," Webb resumed, "you must remember that I do not force you to work for me, and if the money I pay is not enough you are free to quit and go elsewhere."

"It's easy for you to say that," the girl flung back, "when you know we have to take what you offer or starve."

"Much easier to say than do," Flemming chimed in. "By the way dad do the employers keep their help so close to starvation?"

"What others pay is none of our business. I have never tried to find out what they pay, having enough trouble with my own help. In time you'll get used to it."

"Other men do pay better wages now. I'll take her case up with Flemming in the morning."

"And they treat their help like hotto see my dad on the wrong side, and I'm going to see if I can put him right."

Molly

smiled playfully and handed him a copy of "The Ladies' World."

"There's an article in this on Pure Foods by a Prof. Lewis B. Allyn of whom you may have read, and whose work has made a little town up in Massachusetts—Westfield—known as the Pure Food Town. The professor and the editors are running up a food campaign. You might find it interesting."

Jack took the magazine and promised to read it carefully.

Before retiring that night he had mapped out a definite course. In the morning he had Flemming show him through his father's factory. From the dingy office he proceeded to the workrooms and on every side found a malodorous confirmation of Mary Rand's statements. The entire place reeked with filth, just as she had asserted, and he shuddered to think of any one eating catsup, jams or jellies that had been put up under such conditions. Rounded shoulders, emaciated hands, and drawn, bloodless faces met him at each turn. Not one healthy check did he encounter during his trip.

He passed from room to room, inspecting but fearing to touch the filthy kettles, or pat the poorly nourished children, cutting up fruits and vegetables, whose wistful glances followed him out of the place. Many sanitary practices he had seen were palmed off to his father's factory—his father's factory, he thought, his brown eyes snapping with remnant. And all this represented the source of his father's income. It was almost unbelievable that his own father could have stooped so low. Paint from the stench that enveloped him he hurried to the oven, gasping for a mouth of fresh air. At the curb he met Webb, haphazardly putting at a cigar as he stepped from his auto.

"Well, Jack," Webb laughed. "I suppose you've made your preliminary rounds."

Jack nodded. "It's worse than a pig sty dad. Don't you ever dream of cleaning the place?"

"We have a janitor for that."

"You'd need an army to make an impression on that place."

Webb shrugged his shoulders and grunted. "Don't bother about the cleaning I'll attend to that. Has Wilson showed you how you mix the 'stop'?"

A perplexed look crept into Jack's eyes.

"I didn't quite get that done part dad."

Jack nodded. "It's worse than a pig sty dad. Don't you ever dream of cleaning the place?"

"We have a janitor for that."

"You'd need an army to make an impression on that place."

Webb shrugged his shoulders and grunted. "Don't bother about the cleaning I'll attend to that. Has Wilson showed you how you mix the 'stop'?"

"Well, Jack," Webb laughed. "I suppose you've made your preliminary rounds."

But I don't understand why they should not."

"In simple terms," the professor replied smilingly, "we have a Pure Label law. You are required to simply state on the label the various adulterants or preservatives used. The poor and the ignorant buy these poisonous products because they are cheap, and because they don't recognize the ingredients as harmful—they don't read the small print on the labels. We must do more." The professor's voice rose and a new light of conviction radiated from his kindly eyes. "We must protect our people against themselves."

To Jack the professor's remarks were a revelation and made him hungry for more details. All inquiries were met with a ready response, and when Jack finished he had stored up a world of information and high regard for Professor Allyn. He wished that his father had been present at the meeting.

"Any time I can assist you in really manufacturing pure foods I shall be only too pleased to do so."

Jack warmly thanked him and then started for home, his mind whirling with new plans for the future. His father, he felt would have to change his methods or drown his son. When he reached home he found his father in the library puffing contentedly at a cigar.

"I've been up to Westfield—the Pure Food Town—to see Professor Allyn about the foods you put up," he said, scowling any heating about the bush.

Webb jerked the cigar from his mouth and grunted his disapproval.

"I thought you had better sense to listen to that fool school teacher's prattle. He's just a plain sore head trying to drive people out of business."

"I don't agree with you dad. You say that because you don't know the man."

"And don't want to know him."

"But he's really doing a great service for mankind," Jack protested seating himself on the arm of a large rocker.

"Great fiddlesticks! He's pulled the wool over your eyes, same as he has with the public. If you're going to listen to every muckraker with an axe to grind you better give up the idea of going into business with me."

Jack saw that he had a difficult task before him but he was willing to be patient.

"You do him an injustice," he persisted. "He's not the old faker you imagine, and he hasn't any axe to grind. Neither is he trying to put you out of business. All he asks you to do is to keep your foods and workrooms clean and pure and stop using chemical preservatives and colors."

"Clean and pure—the stock phrase of every disgruntled reformer."

And who is he anyway?" Webb demanded, blowing a cloud of smoke toward the ceiling. "Don't I comply with the law? Doesn't the government inspect my labels? Haven't I been forced to spend thousands to fix up my place far too good for the dirty, ungrateful help? It's all tommy rot, Jack and the sooner you rid yourself of these foot notions the better it will be for both of us."

Jack nodded at his father, steadily, unflinchingly, as he would have looked at any wrong-doer.

"You have done all they forced you to do," he said slowly and evenly, "and that is just where you made your mistake. You forgot you were selling to human beings, living human beings like yourself, your family and my dead mother. What would you have said if some one killed her by filthy poisoned catsup?"

Webb trembled and his cigar dropped to the floor. For his father's benefit Jack was heartless and concluded:

"Other men don't have to be forced so why should you, or anybody in fact? Have you lost every Christian impulse, taught to you at your mother's knee? Is the dollar your God or the one that put breath and soul into your body? You're my father, the father I've looked up to with reverence and pride since childhood, and I'd much rather he dead than to have to think of you as a vulture. I've seen some things in the past two days and I know what I'm talking about. Some of your products are poisonous—cheap dyes and adulterants! What do you intend to do?"

With clenched teeth and closed fist Webb rose and walked to the side-board. After taking a mouthful of brandy he turned and confronted his son.

"So this is the graditude of a son!

You, above all, are going to live up with the muckrakers. You're gonna be proud of. I'm not going to quarrel but I'm going to tell you a few plain facts. I've spent my entire life in this business and no one is going to dictate to me—son or no son. You can't come here, take a two day course and overturn everything."

"I've no desire to overturn anything that is right."

"Well then get rid of your foolish ideas. Do you want to sweep away all profits?"

"Suppose I do use benzoate or soda in my stuff—and alum, coal tar dyes, and all the rest, that's my business. I've been doing it for years, and I'm too old to change. If you're not prepared to run the place as I wish I'll stay at the head of it."

"You're welcome to the job dad, I'll never go near your factory until you can have your goods conform to Professor Allyn's Westfield Standard and I'll be proud of. I'm not going to quarrel but I'm going to tell you a few plain facts. I've spent my entire life in this business and no one is going to dictate to me—son or no son. YOUNG WOMAN BECAME INSANE

FOUND ON PLEASANT STREET
EARLY SUNDAY MORNING BY OFFICER McCAFFERY

On Sunday morning a Police Officer McCaffery was on his way to the police station his attention was attracted to a well dressed young woman on Pleasant street near the post office who was shouting and acting very strangely. After a brief observation the officer became satisfied that the woman was suffering from an attack of insanity and he decided to take her to the station. On her arrival there it was found that she was quite badly deranged and medical assistance was summoned. The young woman was later identified as being from Providence R. I. and had been employed at a nearby summer hotel as a stenographer. On Friday she came to the city and went to a local hotel but nothing was noticed wrong in her demeanor and it is presumed that the attack did not develop until Sunday morning. Later in the day the young woman was removed to a private hospital for treatment and hope is entertained that her reason will soon be restored. It is stated that she has previously been in a sanitarium.

right direction. Webb said nothing to Jack about the visit and Jack made no effort to probe him. Introspection would do more than a dozen stormy debates.

The next evening Evelyn, Jack's little sister, was taken desperately ill and was found in the June closet with a partly emptied jar of strawberry preserves writhing in pain. "A bad case of arsenic poisoning," said the doctor as he worked over the child, and Webb knew only too well where this deadly drug had come from, for the strawberry preserves were Webb's brand—and the arsenic from the coal dusts they contained. He begged and pleaded with the doctor to save his child, offering anything and everything. He vowed and wept in turns, vowed never again to sell poisoned foods, and promised if his daughter should be spared to him he would make amends. The doctor worked over the child for two hours and finally brought her out of danger. While the excitement was at its height word was brought that the old Webb factory was in flames.

"Hurry, daddy," Evelyn whispered, putting her arms around his neck. "Maybe you can save something."

He shook his head.

"Let it burn," he answered, turning his head towards the window, through which could be seen the reflection of the flames shooting skyward. "I'll build a new one—one that will suit your brother Jack."

Jack sprang forward and grasped his father's trembling hand.

"I'm glad to hear that dad, and you'll never live to regret it."

Webb looked up, tears showing in his eyes.

"It took a long time to see things right, Jack, but it's been brought home to me and I owe it all to you and the little grey-haired professor—tell him I'm sorry and want to change—to follow his advice. He was a real man and I didn't know it."

"In that case, dad," Jack remarked, "you don't object to Nelly Trumbull as a daughter-in-law."

"You bet I won't my boy. I see lots of things differently than I did a few years ago."

"Ho happy Jack, and may God bless you."

OBITUARY

Albert Shapleigh

The body of Albert Shapleigh who died in Chelsea, Mass., will be brought here today for burial in Sagamore cemetery, with committal services at the grave.

Mrs. Maria Martha Currier

Mrs. Maria Martha Currier, widow of Edwin Currier of Penacook, N. H., passed away on Sunday at the home of her son, Fred C. Currier on Lincoln avenue, after a lingering illness.

She was born at Corinth, Vt., Feb. 24, 1812. While a resident of Penacook she became affiliated with Hannah Dustin's Rebekah Lodge and passed through all of the chairs. She was a woman of a lovable disposition and her death will be keenly felt by the members of her immediate household.

Besides her son, she is survived by two brothers, Frank and Hiram Currier.

Mrs. James F. Peavey

Death on Sunday claimed Mrs. James F. Peavey, the beloved wife of James F. Peavey, who passed away at her home on Dearborn street after a lingering illness. She was the daughter of Elizur and Mary Keyes of Portland, Me., and was born Feb. 21, 1850.

Her marriage to Mr. Peavey took place at Somersworth on June 4, 1877. As the result of the union three children are living, Albert H., of Toledo Ohio; Edgar M., of Abington, Mass., and Mary H. Gowell of Swampscott. To the bereaved husband is extended the sympathy of a large circle of friends in his hour of affliction. The body will be taken to Somersworth for burial in Forest Glade cemetery.

Sarah Elizabeth Bancroft

Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Bancroft died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Richard E. Hannaford on Richard avenue, shortly after 9 o'clock Sunday morning after an illness of only three days. She was born in Salisbury, Mass., on what is now known as the Harriet Prescott Spofford place, March 25, 1836, her parents being Abraham and Mary J. Pray. Her marriage to Mr. Bancroft took place on Nov. 16, 1857. For a number of years they made their home in Merrimac, Mass. but since Mr. Bancroft's death she has made her home in this city and during her stay here made many staunch friends who will be deeply grieved to learn of her death. She was a member of the North Congregational church. Besides her daughter she leaves one sister Mrs. Caroline Loud of Somerville, Mass., and brother Abraham Pray of Newburyport, Mass.

Mrs. Margaret M. Kelley

Mrs. Margaret M. Kelley, wife of Patrick J. Kelley, died at her home on Thornton street on Sunday evening shortly after 9 o'clock of pneumonia, after an illness lasting only a week. She was 48 years old and besides her husband and daughter is survived by her mother Mrs. Archibald Ramsay of Prince Edward Island and a sister Mrs. Jane Murray of Cambridge, Mass. Of a jovial and pleasant disposition Mrs. Kelley made friends with all whom she came in contact with and her death will cause genuine sorrow among a large circle of acquaintances. She took a deep interest in Constitution Circle Companions of the Forest and was a Past Chief Companion and state treasurer of the order. Her interest was not confined entirely to the Lady Foresters as she was the first president of Camp Schley Auxiliary and gave a great amount of time to the further advancement of both of these orders and the members feel keenly the great loss they have sustained. As a friend Mrs. Kelley was always loyal and ready to lend a helping hand to those who needed assistance. The news of her death will bring grief to a large circle of acquaintances outside of the immediate family.

Mrs. Mary Olive Geddie

Mrs. Mary Olive Geddie, wife of Andrew J. Geddie passed away early this morning at her home on Bridge street after a long illness, aged 62 years. Mrs. Geddie was a native of Stratham but has passed the most of her life in this city, where her death is mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Besides her husband she is survived by one son, George Moore of Haverhill, three grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

NEW RECTOR FOR

ST. JOHN'S

REV. W. M. PARTRIDGE OF WAL-
LASTON, MASS., OCCUPYING
PULPIT FOR TWO MONTHS

The pulpit of St. John's church is to be supplied the next two months by Rev. W. M. Partridge of Wollaston, Mass., who comes on trial for the vacancy in the rectorship. Rev. Mr. Partridge is said to be a very pleasing speaker and at the services on Sunday made a very favorable impression with the members of the parish.

THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE

Very few productions have met with the instantaneous success that greeted "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." It won such instant favor with theatre-goers that large theatres in Boston, Chicago and New York were packed to the doors nightly for weeks to see Eugene Walter's visualization of the delightful mountain folk that left such a pleasing impression on the minds of millions who have followed the little mountain girl, June, in the pages of Mr. Fox's charming book.

IF YOU ARE A WORKING MAN

Do you know that the one amendment which passed in Wyoming at the last election was one to make provision for workmen's compensation? It was carried by a vote of 24,258 to 3,915, and because of this vote the Legislature, which has just adjourned, was able to pass the working men's compensation act. Do you realize that Wyoming, where this happened, was the first state to give women the vote? Do you know that six other suffrage states, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona and Kansas, have workmen's compensation laws? Women believe in justice for you. Do you believe in justice for women?

CYCLE THIEVES
ARE BUSY AGAINSeveral Wheels Reported
Stolen Since Saturday

Afternoon.

Within the last three days at least five have reported the loss of their bicycles. These wheels have been stolen as the owners left them leaning on the curbs outside stores or their places of business. The epidemic of cycle stealing is a relapse of the disease from last fall. About thirty wheels belonging to people in the city were taken, and at the time it was believed to have been the work of some professional thief. Whether the work being done now is by the same person or persons is not yet known but the police department is looking for some of the culprits and if caught and convicted some of them will enjoy a vacation at the guests of Rockingham county, either in the county jail or at Brentwood.

The bicycle season will be practically over when they return to their trades.

CAN YOU BEAT IT?

Hoboes' Boudoir In a City Water Wagon.

While water wagons are generally known for the open air free transportation of the disciples of John Wesley, here is one that furnished a dormitory for lags who did not care to ride on the outside, and by their presence demonstrate to the world that they were in battle with Demon Rum. On the other hand they would rather sleep on the inside of the cold water chariot, than be a passenger of temperature on narrow seats outside.

A few days ago one of the drivers of the city, sprinklers was ordered to get his wagon ready and get out on the highway to lay the dust. He soon had the necessary load of water and moved along to the asphalt paving to sprinkle but not a drop squirted from the holes in the metal arrangement on the back. He kicked and pulled every valve on the foot-board but the old wagon was as tight as a drum. He got off the seat, gave the rig the twice over and decided that she must go back to the yard for further investigation. The water was siphoned off and the mystery solved. A large matress and two old overcoats were found hard and fast against the pipe outside, completely checking the flow of water. It was the bed of hobos and received its first wash since Moses was discovered in the bulrushes.

REDISTRICTIONS ON COTTON IMPORTS

Suggestions invited by the Department of Agriculture on the proposed Precautions Against the Pink Boll Worm (Washington, D. C., April 11)—A public conference on the restrictions which the Department of Agriculture proposed to place upon the admission of foreign cotton will be held at the department here at 10 o'clock on April 20. The purpose of these restrictions is to protect the country against the possibility of the pink boll worm finding its way into the cotton fields. A report was issued in January of this year outlining the course of action that the department proposed to take, and now copies of the prospective regulations have been sent out to persons interested in the subject with a request for suggestions or criticisms.

Under the proposed plan, permits for the admission of foreign cotton will must be obtained from all imports. Boston, New York, San Francisco and Seattle are at the present time designated as ports of entry for such cotton, but it is possible that other ports may be added to this list from time to time. Application blanks for these permits are provided for in the regulations and all applicants must state the locality where the cotton was grown, the year of growth, the port from which it is being shipped, and the person in the United States to whom it is consigned.

For the remainder of this year no other material restrictions are placed upon the importation of cotton, but after January 1, 1916, the regulations provided that all cotton must be disinfected under the supervision of an Inspector of the Department of Agriculture before it can be moved from the port of entry. The reason for the delay in putting this requirement into practice is the necessity of developing the necessary means for this work. In the case of reports from countries which maintain cotton inspection and are able to certify that the imports are free from injurious diseases and pests, disinfestation will not be required.

In addition to securing a permit for the entry of cotton, shippers must notify the Department of Agriculture of the arrival of all imports and of shipments of the cotton from the port of entry to the consignee. Furthermore, a license must be obtained in order to enable the consignee to use the cotton. He must agree to allow the department to inspect his factory or mill, to store the imported cotton in insect-proof, screened warehouses, and to observe whatever measures may be prescribed by the government to prevent the spread of infection. Moreover the holder of such a license cannot make subsequent shipment of the cotton to anyone except another license holder.

These regulations are the result of a careful study of the danger of seeds containing the pink boll worm coming into the country from the list. Many of the cotton mills in the South are so close to cotton fields that the pest might easily find its way to them through some medium as picker waste. Where the pink boll worm has established itself it has been found to be one of the most destructive of cotton pests and in consequence the department is determined to take every possible precaution against its entry into this country.
